Greener Apron End of Course Survey

Likes

Sustainability Efforts: Participants appreciated learning about Starbucks initiatives to reduce waste and promote sustainable practices globally, both as individuals and as part of the company.

Actionable Insights: The course provided practical tips for personal and professional application, such as conserving water and implementing sustainability practices in stores.

Professional Development: Several participants noted that the course was valuable for their professional growth, especially in advancing their careers within Starbucks.

Increased Awareness: The course helped users feel more connected to Starbucks sustainability goals and increased their personal involvement in these initiatives.

Ongoing Learning Opportunities: Some highlighted the additional resources, such as the "ongoing learning" section and downloadable materials like the action guide PDF.

Dislikes

Desire for More Actionable Resources: Several respondents expressed a need for additional practical resources, such as brainstorming tools, printouts, and clear steps for implementing sustainability initiatives in stores and communities.

Skepticism about Impact: There is a desire for more transparency, specifically wanting direct, unfiltered input from farmers about whether their lives have improved due to Starbucks efforts.

Content Format Preferences: Some participants preferred reading over videos, found the visual content poorly formatted (e.g., videos enlarged or cut off), or felt that some information was presented in an overly basic or repetitive way.

Request for Specific Information: Some respondents wanted more specific details, such as information on Starbucks uniform sourcing and sustainable product SKUs for stores.

Perceived Lack of Depth: A few participants felt that the course was too basic, repetitive, or delivered in a "laundry list" style that lacked engagement or meaningful depth.

Greener Apron End of Course Survey

“I would love a course on how to lean into cafe culture and expand opportunities to help the community be more sustainable, posting bus routes and community resources”

Ideas for New Courses

“I would love to learn how to become an ASM and how to use the star interview model and connect with other aspiring ASMs to practice interviewing”

Interest in Deeper Sustainability Education: Respondents expressed a desire for more detailed, advanced courses on sustainability, building on foundational knowledge and covering specific topics like sustainable purchasing habits, veganism, and recycling practices.

Practical, Community-Oriented Action: There is strong interest in learning how to make sustainability efforts more actionable in local communities, including café culture, posting bus routes, and getting involved in specific environmental projects.

Hands-on Sustainability Initiatives: Some participants want more hands-on ideas and practical guidance for contributing to sustainability, such as sorting plastics for recycling, using coffee grounds, and accessing local initiatives.

Career and Professional Development: One respondent sought guidance on becoming an Assistant Store Manager (ASM), particularly around using the STAR interview model and connecting with others for practice, reflecting a desire for professional growth opportunities alongside sustainability education.

Transparency and Visibility of Starbucks' Efforts: Participants recommended including more videos that showcase Starbucks' sustainability efforts across different stages—corporate, stores, farms, and manufacturing—to provide greater transparency and inspiration.

Support for Store-Level Ideas: There is hope that store teams with sustainability ideas can have more opportunities to contribute and be heard, reinforcing the importance of grassroots, team-based sustainability efforts.
